ActionFront Recovers Lost Data from a Failed iPod

*Ability to work with tiny hard drives honed on the 1 inch MicroDrive.
iPod's 1.8 inch drive is the latest in long list of conquered media.*

(Atlanta, GA) – February 12, 2004 – ActionFront Data Recovery Labs today announced that they had recovered data from a failed iPod. Like most MP3 players, the iPod can double as a data backup device and this iPod was submitted to ActionFront to retrieve inaccessible application data.

John “magic fingers” Yost, a senior ActionFront recovery specialist states “These 1.8 inch drives use a new embedded ATA interface, which appears similar to the PC-card type interface but is entirely different. A special adaptor and special screw drivers were sourced overseas in order to work on this drive”.

ActionFront is the only company capable of recovering data from IBM’s 1 inch MicroDrive, which also requires a special tool set. Experience gained working on the MicroDrive speeded up the research on the iPod drive.

ActionFront’s data-recovery-media-success-list ranges from the tiniest hard drives holding personal photos to the largest files servers and tape libraries containing business-critical enterprise data.

About ActionFront
